

LOOK UP TO FIND THESE DETAILS IN DOWNTOWN

Above: A detail of the Cast Iron column on the Albany Regional Museum Building. The face is said to represent Minerva the goddess of wisdom, and was cast in Albany at the Albany Iron Works. The column has since been painted black.

Left: Flinn Building Close-up photo by: Steve Reed.

Below: Cornice detail on Ellsworth Street. Photo by: Rebecca Bond

Then & Now Above: Historical photo Courtesy of the Albany Regional Museum, from the Robert Potts Collection, Remembering When Vol II #48. Albany Street Car on the SW corner of First and Ellsworth. The building still stands with the upper floor and bay windows removed as seen here. Albany's current Trolley on the SW corner of First and Ellsworth. The building to the right of the trolley is undergoing extensive restoration. Current Photo by: Tyler Gould.

Below: The c1900 on the corner of First and Ellsworth has been keeping time in Downtown Albany since 1970 when it was brought here from Portland The original F.M. French clock was sold and is currently in Rosburg, OR. Photo by: Oliver J. Anderson.

Above: Advertisements painted on commercial buildings were popular in Albany as well as on Main Street buildings across America. Signs like these, still visible today are called "ghost signs." This sign is located at First Avenue near Lyon Street. Other ghost signs can be seen on Albany's downtown buildings if you look closely. Photo by: Rebecca Bond.